The Constitution provides that Congress shall have power to make the minor offices elective if it pleases, but at present they are by appointment. Touching the question of appointments and removals, our candidate has this grand qualification, that having no party obligations nor private enmities, he will allow good officers to retain their places, and only expel such as are notoriously intriguing, incapable, or corrupt; and there is good reason to believe that he will always prefer such men as are acceptable to the people, and such as will not tamper with public opinion or labor to corrupt the elections. Str. But if it is power that the Whigs want, why should they not use every means to increase their power? Cit. The power which they want is the free unbiassed favor of the nation, not the interested love of dependants. The Whigs are fully aware that the weight of national feeling and opinion is on their side; they wish only for a free expression of that opinion. And this we believe will be allowed them if General Taylor and his friends come into power. Sir. Sir, I am amazed at the expressions which you use-- allowed them. Why, sir, are not the people free? Cit. Not under the so-called Democratic rule. Under that rule the majority does not govern. For, under that rule, the President is endowed with a legislative as well as an executive power. He dictates to Congress; he dictates...
